INTRODUCTION

This list is a compilation of recommended books and journals for a vision science collection. The purpose of this list is to identify titles which should constitute a basic or "opening day" collection for a vision science library in a college, hospital department, medical center, corporate, or association setting. The items are suggested by librarians who are members of the Association of Vision Science Librarians (AVSL), and cover topics of interest for both optometry and ophthalmology collections. The librarians use reserve lists, book reviews, expert opinions, faculty recommendations, usage statistics and other criteria for making their selections. Titles are suggested for inclusion in this list and the additions are reviewed by members present at the AVSL mid-year and annual meetings. Final selections are decided upon by the compilers. The Opening Day Collection is updated periodically, and completely revised approximately every three years.

We hope that this list continues to help vision science libraries with their collection development decisions.

Note About Media Section

In October 2016 it was decided by the Opening Day Committee that the Media section would be removed from the Opening Day List. Per the 2016 member survey and subsequent discussions, it was noted that DVDs and CD-Roms were no longer being produced, purchased, or used as they had been in the past. It did not make fiscal sense to recommend these materials for purchase by our member libraries.

For those interested in these materials, the Media List will be kept up to date by Mike Piorunski, and posted as a separate resource on the AVSL website.
